FARMER FOCUS

Here at Choices, we believe in supporting our local farmers. They're the heroes who grow the fresh, delicious food we put on our plates. Let's meet two of our farmer friends so that you can know a little more about the people who work hard to bring food from farm to table!

Little Creek Organics

In 1995, Donna Denison bottled the first batch of Little Creek Dressing on her family farm – Little Creek Gardens. More than two decades later, the dressing is still made with care in small batches.

The Little Creek property has been in the Denison family since 1947. Donna, her husband Dale, and son Jubi moved to the land in 1984 to farm organic vegetables. Ten years later, looking for a way to work from home while she raised her twin daughters, Donna decided to try bottling the salad dressing she had always served with the organic greens from the farm.

Donna developed each dressing recipe using high-quality, organic ingredients paired with handcrafted vinegars to create unique, artisan flavours. As well, all the dressings are now certified organic, vegan, GMO-free, and produced using renewably-sourced energy.

Green Dirt Farms

The Wolfe family chose farming because they wanted to spend more time together as a family. So in 2012, when their oldest was two, they found a patch of land to lease in the wild & rugged region of Lillooet. The warm & dry summers make it an ideal area for organic farming. Plus it's a quiet community with vast outdoor spaces that make it a great place for raising kids.

Over the years the Green Dirt farm model has evolved into growing garlic & baby salad greens for distribution in BC & Alberta grocery stores. Green Dirt wants the food they grow to be something they feel good about feeding to their family, so they've chosen to grow organically. They're committed to the stewardship of the land and believe being certified organic allows them to communicate a commitment to health & sustainability. Furthermore, they've chosen to grow Veganically – meaning they use only plant-based fertilizers to avoid any potential contaminants from commercial organic fertilizers.

Why go more plant-based?

A half century ago, vegetarian and vegan diets were viewed with concern by health professionals. In decades since, these have been the focus of vast amounts of research. Today, a dietary shift in the direction of plant foods is regarded as a very positive step by knowledgeable dietitians, MDs, nutritional scientists and by a growing number of the general public. Why the shift?

Reduced risk of chronic disease:

Two areas of well-designed research centred on health conscious individuals with different dietary patterns, all of whom were in good health at the beginning of the study and who were followed for many years, are shown below. In North America, the Adventist Health Study-2 (AHS-2) included 96,000 participants. In the UK, the EPIC-Oxford study included 65,000 participants. Compared with health-conscious non-vegetarians (some of whom had meat as little as once a week), below are the rates of disease of a) those who included dairy (lacto) and eggs (ovo) but no flesh foods, and b) vegans who consumed no animal products.

	Health-conscious lacto-ovo-vegetarians	Health-conscious vegans	Study
Mortality	9% lower	15% lower	AHS-2
Cardiovascular disease	23% lower	42% lower	AHS-2
Hypertension	55% lower	75% lower	AHS-2
Type 2 diabetes	38% lower	62% lower	AHS-2
Cancer	11% / 8% lower	16% / 19% lower	EPIC-Oxford/ AHS-2
Cataracts	30% lower	40% lower	EPIC-Oxford
Diverticular disease	27% lower	72% lower	EPIC-Oxford
Kidney disease	52% lower	52% lower	AHS-2

Healthful foods:

Plant foods are concentrated sources of fibre, powerfully protective phytochemicals, antioxidants and anti-inflammatory compounds consistently linked with favourable health outcomes. Plants provide all the protein, minerals, essential fats and carbohydrates that fuel our brain. The plant world gives us every nutrient we need apart from B12, which always originates from bacteria in anyone's diet.

When we leave out meat, we eliminate Neu5Gc (linked with cancer) pro-oxidants such as heme iron. We reduce our intake of saturated fat and avoid the carnitine that is transformed into trimethylamine N-oxide (TMAO), in both cases reducing our risk of cardiovascular disease.

Care about the environment:

Until fairly recently, those who viewed themselves as environmentalists entirely ignored the even more potentially effective action of shifting their own dietary choice. However, since the UN's Environment Programme's (UNEP) international panel of sustainable resource management and the National Academy of Sciences recommended a global shift to a plant-based diet, many are taking notice and action.

Compassion for animals:

Most people would not stand for a dog or beautiful wild bird being abused. Yet pigs (smarter than dogs) and chickens (even "free-range") lead lives that would outrage many. By becoming vegetarian, we stop supporting the use of animals as food.

Going plant-based is economical and even delicious:

Whether you choose meat-free Mondays or are entirely plant-based all week, you can save some serious cash. Granted, there is a bit of an adjustment time and one needs to explore new sections of the supermarket, learn a few kitchen skills and seek out different restaurants. But because vegan food preparation is a peak interest for many chefs and very tasty plant-based protein sources have been developed, making a change is an inviting adventure. Check out www.meetup.com/MeatlessMeetup and www.happycow.net and have fun with it!

Eating for the Planet

By Pamela Fergusson, RD PhD

What can I do to eat a more environmentally-friendly diet?

Try these tips for a greener kitchen:

Eat more plants

Plant-based diets have lower greenhouse gas emissions, a lower water footprint, make better use of our land resources, and help to protect wild species from extinction.

Support your local growers

Buying local and in-season fruits and vegetables will decrease the number of miles that your food travels. This is also a way to support your local farmers and your local economy. In the summer we have a bounty of fruits and vegetables to choose from, and in the winter we can look for foods that keep well in winter storage like cabbage, apples and sweet potatoes, and select frozen fruits and veggies.

Reduce food waste

The average Canadian household throws away 140 kg of food each year, at a cost of more than $1000. All that food waste also comes at a high cost to the environment. A little meal planning and meal prep can go a long way to reducing food waste. Shopping with a list will help you to avoid impulse purchases. Remember that most prepped meals can be stored in the refrigerator for up to 5 days, so don't hesitate to prep ahead for the week! Date and freeze anything you won't be using right away.

Reduce packaging

The zero waste movement is gaining popularity across Canada and there are so many tips to help you reduce your packaging waste in the kitchen. Buying in bulk is a great start, especially for beans, lentils, grains, teas, spices and baking essentials. Bringing your own shopping bags and produce bags is another good way to reduce single-use plastics.

Pamela Fergusson is a Registered Dietitian with a PhD in nutrition, and over 15 years of experience with changing lives through better nutrition. She has worked as a lecturer in nutrition at the Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine, UK and Ryerson University, Canada.

The Principles of Intuitive Eating

By Zara Neukom, BSc FNH

The fundamentals of intuitive eating were developed by Registered Dietitians, Evelyn Tribole and Elyse Resch in the early 90's. There is a growing body of research indicating that intuitive eaters have a better relationship with their bodies and food, they show increased measures of self-esteem, and engage in more healthful behaviors. This is important information because tuning into our body's signals is such a critical part of a healthy and balanced lifestyle. So, what's the goal of this practice? To embrace a natural and intuitive approach to eating, where food becomes about health, joy, and pleasure.

The Ten Principles of Intuitive Eating

- 1. Reject the diet mentality – Let go of food rules. Focus on what feels good for you and your body.
- 2. Honour your hunger – Get curious about your first true hunger signals and fuel yourself properly.
- 3. Make peace with food – Give yourself unconditional permission to eat.
- 4. Challenge the food police – Food has no moral agenda: remind yourself that you are not good or bad for the food you eat.
- 5. Respect your fullness – Listen to the body signals that tell you that you are no longer hungry.
- 6. Discover satisfaction – When we re-discover the pleasure of eating we also discover our true satiety and satisfaction signals.
- 7. Honour your feelings without using food – Find ways to comfort, nurture, distract, and resolve your issues without using food.
- 8. Accept your body – Honour your genetic blueprint and respect your body. Treat it with love and kindness.
- 9. Exercise and feel the difference – Get active and shift your focus from how it feels to move your body rather than punishment for something you ate.
- 10. Honour your health – Make food choices that honour your health and taste buds while making you feel well.

Meat

Venison:

Venison is the most widely consumed variety of wild game. New Zealand farmed venison offers a leaner option for red meat that is low in saturated fat while being a good source of protein, iron, and other vitamins and minerals. Because the majority of venison from New Zealand is grass fed, the ratio of omega-6 to omega-3 fats is also more favourable. Venison can be cooked like regular steak, roasted, or made into a stew or chili.

Grocery Gossip

Little Creek Dressing:

Made locally in BC, Little Creek Dressing is vegan, organic, GMO-free, and free of added sugars and emulsifiers. Additionally, these are low in sodium. The company is committed to creating nutritious foods that support healthy living and a healthy planet. The unique artisan flavours of each dressing are mouthwatering and versatile, being ideal to use in numerous dishes. Aside from adding Little Creek Dressing to your salad, try them in Buddha bowls, flatbreads, wraps, sandwiches, bean salads, noodle salads, pasta dishes, and as dips for French fries.

Big Mountain Veggie Patties:

If you're in search of a vegan soy-free and wheat-free veggie burger, look no further than Big Mountain Veggie Patties. Made from wholesome ingredients like split peas, green peas, sunflower seeds, carrots, and chia seeds, they are also high in protein and a source of healthy omega-3 fats. Additionally, they are free from artificial preservatives and lower in sodium than many store-bought veggie burgers. Because they are pre-cooked, you can heat them quickly in the microwave, pan-fry them lightly, or grill them up. You can also use them to replace ground beef in several dishes, such as chili, stew, or Bolognese sauce.

Wellness Centre

New Roots Organic Fermented Beet Root Powder:

Beets are exceptional sources of dietary nitrates and antioxidants. Dietary nitrates have been shown to improve athletic performance and increase blood flow, an effect that is also valuable for individuals suffering from medical conditions that affect circulation and tissue oxygenation, such as emphysema, heart disease, and high blood pressure. Because they also support circulation in the brain, they may provide protection against dementia. Beet root helps to strengthen the kidneys, lymphatic system, spleen, liver, and gallbladder, as well as digestive health. New Roots's Fermented Beet Root Powder is GMO free and organic, making it effortless to reap the benefits of beets on a daily basis. The process of fermentation eliminates the naturally occurring sugar present and enhances the bioavailability of the nutrients present. Add this powder to water, smoothies, fruit juice, yogurts, baked goods, dips, soups, and stews! It is best used post-workout.

Choice Produce Picks

Blueârries:

A true superfood, blueberries contain nearly ten times the antioxidants of other fruits and vegetables. Numerous studies show that they help to protect against cancer, boost the immune system, and support liver and brain health. The best part is that it is easy to include them in our daily diet due to their versatility and natural sweetness. While they are delicious on their own, you can add them to your oatmeal or cereal, yogurt, salads, smoothies and desserts for added flavour and nutrition.

TASTY TOP CHOICES RECIPE

Blueârry Chia Jam

- 2 cups of blueberries, fresh or frozen
- 1-2 tablespoons lemon juice, to taste
- 1-2 tablespoons sweetener of choice (e.g. honey, maple syrup, coconut nectar, date paste), to taste
- 2 tablespoons chia seeds

In a saucepan, cook the fruit on medium heat until it starts to soften and become syrupy.

Take off heat. Stir in the desired sweetener, lemon juice and chia seeds.

Let sit for around 10-15 minutes or until thickened. Add more chia seeds for a thicker consistency. (Start with 1 teaspoon at a time)

Once cooled, transfer to an air-tight container and store in the fridge for about 2 weeks or freeze for up to 3 months.

On Field Tomatoes

Summer's in full swing, and with the long warm days you'll find the production of field tomatoes is at its peak. You might be wondering what the big deal about field tomatoes is. You can get tomatoes year round, after all. Well, hot house tomatoes are great in that they allow us to have fresh tomatoes way earlier than nature would normally allow us, and keep enjoying them well into the fall. Field tomatoes have a much shorter growing span, and usually only have one harvest per plant, but the quality and taste of a field tomato make them one of the best delicacies summer has to offer.

Hot house tomatoes are great in that they are often uniform in shape and size and share nearly identical characteristics. However, these fruits are often far wetter and watery than their field grown counterparts. When it comes to flavour, taste and texture, field grown tomatoes are really in a league of their own. Pro chefs and home kitchen cooks alike need to take advantage of this summer bounty while they can. A simple fresh slice of field tomato with a drizzle of olive oil, salt and pepper, is a magical experience. Take it up another notch with freshly picked basil, balsamic vinegar and fresh mozzarella or burrata to make a to-die-for caprese salad.

We should also make sure we try and preserve the summer love through the winter the best way we can. Plum tomatoes like Roma or, if you can find them, San Marzano tomatoes work great when making your own canned tomatoes or tomato sauce. Stuff those jars to the brim with tomato goodness. If your goal is to make some delicious tomato sauce to last you through the winter and you can't find the varieties listed above, classic Beefsteak or Oxheart tomatoes will do nicely. Just remember that they are more watery. When canning, always find a reliable recipe to prevent spoilage and potential foodborne illnesses.

Got enough sauce for your pizza and pasta? Great, but don't stop now. Take your favourite recipe for fresh salsa or bruschetta and preserve them in your canning jars for summer freshness all year round. Keep at it by making some delicious soups and freeze them for hearty meals in the colder winter months. Why not try experimenting with your own signature ketchup blend? Customize it to your own personal taste with fresh herbs and spices.

Cherry tomatoes are another summer gem. They tend to have a higher acidity, keep that in mind if using them as a base for your canning and sauces. I have vivid childhood memories of long cherry tomato vines hanging in the cellars and kitchen corners of my youth. For months they extended the flavour of summer as the little golden spheres were picked on by one, sliced, diced and chopped into recipes (or maybe just popped whole into your mouth for a juicy squirt).

No matter how you slice it, field tomatoes are one of the best ways to enjoy summer deliciousness all year round.

Looking to try Chef Antonio's globally inspired creations? You can try them every day at the Choices Deli! Perfect for a quick lunch or take them home for dinner.
